Create impact

"I was curious about how I could leverage my technical CPA skill set and be directly involved with impact initiatives related to sustainability and social justice. Everything I've trained for as a CPA, including analytical skills, interpersonal skills, reporting, and audit, is relevant, so working in ESG (Environmental, Social and Governance) has been a wonderful way to combine my different passions and skills."

— Jocelyn Li, CPA
KPMG Canada

Who is a CPA?

CPAs are big thinkers, innovators, sustainability drivers, and so much more!

A Chartered Professional Accountant (CPA) doesn't just crunch numbers. In a world of disruptive change, CPAs create value for organizations in all industries by finding new ways to use their expertise and strategic insight to carve new paths forward.

CPAs work in organizations of every size and in every industry. Many become CEOs or presidents, or start their own businesses. CPAs are in demand in every sector, including in tech, sustainability, entertainment, consulting, and not-for-profit organizations around the world.

Support a rural community

"CPAs are critical to the economic viability and longevity of small towns. There's a crew of CPAs, myself included, that support the mayor and council and ensure our community is properly funded today and 100 years into the future. And there are CPAs behind many of the successful businesses in town - rural communities really rely on the CPA expertise for the City's economic viability but also for the business community."
